

I'm afraid of what will happen if the media ownership laws are changed. This is a dangerous thing to do. It appears Michael Powell has already made up his mind and does not care about diversity in the media. Owning 35% of the national market is already too much. Money is the bottom line, not promoting diversity and new ideas. In order for a democracy to thrive, different voices must be heard. I applaud the commissioners who are traveling across the country to educate the public on what is going on. Most people have no idea the FCC is considering changing broadcast ownership laws. That's because the "Big 6" don't want them to know, and they control all of the media.